

Abstract

Social protection of persons with disabilities

My thesis treats social protection of persons with disabilities. The purpose of the thesis is to analyse the Czech and French legislation in the field of social security of person with disabilities.

The thesis is composed of four sections. The first section which is divided into two chapters is dedicated to generalities – the first chapter gives a theoretic definition of the handicap and persons with disabilities. The second chapter investigates the protection of person with disabilities from the point of view of the international law and European Union's law that represent the foundation of the Czech and French legal system.

The second section which is divided into five chapters analyses the Czech legal order. The third chapter provides an outline of Czech legal definition of relevant terms. The next chapter describes assessment of health, which is provided by Medical Assessment Service. The fifth chapter treats social insurance's and state social support's security benefits. The sixth chapter look at security benefits which are provided by the social assistance system. It consists of three subchapters where the first one treats the care allowance, the procedure and social services. The next subchapter described the mobility allowance, the allowance for the special aid and theirs procedure. The third subchapter deals with the cards for persons with disabilities. The last chapter of the second sections investigates some others benefits, mainly tax benefits.

The third section of the thesis provides an outline of French legislation and it consists of three chapters. The eighth chapters determinates the relevant terms with respect to French law. The ninth and eleventh chapters deal with allowances which are provided to persons with disabilities on the basis of Social Security Code and Social Work and Family Code.

The last section of the thesis contains the comparison of the Czech social security system with the French one.
